BACKGROUND INVESTIGATIONS

Getting it right, the first time.

Why would anyone need a background check? You can get so much information by just looking up information on the Internet. So why all the worry?

In New Mexico, certain industries require employees to have background checks. One of those industries is health care. Local health care providers work hard to ensure the patients they serve are safe and treated with the care and compassion they deserve. However, ensuring the person directly responsible for the patient's care is qualified can be challenging.

A process that only includes fingerprinting for newly hired employees may be inefficient. Weeks can go by before learning of negative results that could lead to an employee termination. These terminations expose the employer to many types of liabilities and may result in unemployment compensation claims.

Turnover is high in most areas of health care. Having the ability to review a thorough background investigation in as little as 24 hours means you can fill positions quickly, reducing employee burnout and increasing patient satisfaction.
